

Benefits of Membership

"I consider Campus Compact to be one of the most enlightened and farsighted ventures that American colleges and universities have undertaken in recent years. It provides evidence that there are, in the world of higher education, people more than willing to pitch in, people of vision and commitment."

John Gardner,
Former U.S. Secretary of Health, Education And Welfare and Former President of the Carnegie Corporation

- Trusted resources for presidents, faculty, students, and community service staff, including books, periodicals, and extensive online resources for connecting campuses and communities.
- Successful campus models for community engagement, including thousands of exemplary practices, program models, and sample syllabi.
- Funding for campus-based community outreach, with more than $28 million raised in the past decade.
- Value and visibility for presidents, including national leadership colloquia, influential public statements, special bulletins, and forums for promoting the public good of higher education.
- Extensive opportunities for faculty to attend institutes and workshops designed to improve community-based teaching, learning, and research.
- Recognition for student leaders, with national and statewide campaigns, training, awards, and numerous avenues for civic and community engagement.
- Professional development for administrators and staff, including workshops for chief academic officers and community service / service-learning directors.
- Hands-on technical support through our state and national office.
- Advocacy and policy work, including work with national and state policymakers, as well as action alerts and online tools for affecting legislation.
- A growing national network of more than 1,000 campus presidents and chancellors who are committed to building strong communities and creating informed citizens.

"Campus Compact has helped foster a network of people involved in the public interest at institutions of higher ed, which has been a great resource."

Harvard University